

NO. 306

... Simpson is in the city making...

FIRE.—The shoe store of Mr. Lew, on Jackson street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, north side, was accidentally on fire yesterday afternoon by one of the workmen. Help was called and the neighbors rallied and subdued the flames with the assistance of the fire department. The damage was slight.

FAMILY DIFFICULTY.—A negro woman named Maria Logan attacked her recent spouse, Edward, in front of the office of

Superintendent of Police, last evening, beat him to her satisfaction, "for having been so long in jail, left her at home while he spent his time in the streets, and for not loving the girls. The police-both of them—in jail."

STEALING.—Our police are on the trace for the petty thieves who have been robbing the yards of our citizens on Jacob street, between First and Second streets, for several months past. These thieves have been robbing the yards of citizens in that locality and stealing shrubs, rose bushes, &c. The citizens of that neighborhood are on the watch for them, and are picking their flints for action.

ACCIDENT.—A little daughter of Dr. C. C. Calkins, who resides on Portland avenue, near the corner of Washington street, was seriously injured yesterday, when she climbed a tree and fell.

story will slow and tell outstriking head on the front pavement, breaking jaw ~~and~~ producing concussion of the brain. The little sufferer was in great agony all night, with but feeble hopes of recovery.

—The commencement exercises of Louisville Female High School will take place in the Wessiger Hall to-night. It no doubt be a very interesting entertainment and we do not know of a more pleasant place to spend an evening ~~than~~ in the presence of such an array of youth, beauty and intelligence as will entertain and amuse all who may honor the occasion with their presence this evening. Go early and take some-

MAD DOGS.—Mr. S. S. Cavender, who resides near the mouth of Hickory creek, informs that several rabid dogs have been in the neighborhood recently. The community is considerably alarmed, as a number of dogs in the neighborhood have been bitten, some of which have gone mad and been killed. Others have gone away, and have doubtless inoculated extensively dozens of other localities. We notice dogs at large, in the streets of Louisville, unuzzled. Would it not be well to view the danger, for every able-bodied citizen to kill these curs wherever found?

A RUN-AWAY.—A fractious horse, driven by a Teutonic gentleman who had a bad run away with a soap grease wagon. East Walnut street yesterday. The driver arising from the barrels that were damaged by the Highland Fling in the wagon, was a thing but agreeable to the inhabitants "at the line." Overtaking a Walnut street car, the driver attacked the car with a lever, and the driver over the dash board, and hurt pretty badly. Going on, "old soap grease" overtook another, and the mules attacked the car with a lever, and the driver in the car in the street. "Soap grease" was on, and came near colliding with all the cars and riding them off all the mules, they were to be seen to the "old soap grease" cars all "on time" again, but the last one the horse and wagon, they were going toward Cave Hill, and a fat "Kentucky chaser" was seen to be "old soap grease" ramrodded soap grease, with his hat in one hand.

Tiger at Large in Antwerp.

[From the Escout, June 6.]

A frightful misadventure, accompanied by most tragic circumstances, spread throughout the southern part of Antwerp district of St. Jacques. The Zoological Garden has for a long time been in possession of one of the magnificent Bengal tigers which was known as "Tiger" in London. To avoid accident, the animal was placed in a wagon, secured with strong iron bars, and covered with a tarpaulin. It was taken to the railway station at 3:30 p.m. On the morning of the 4th, the animal clearing at the Zoological Gardens on the railway station. The tiger was in fact, escaped, having bent and broken through the iron bars. The escape, the first object of his fury was the corpse of a nightman, which happened to be passing. The tiger bounded over the fence, and tearing the straps which attached him to the cart. The driver,

A wedding is always an important event, extending more or less widely according to the social position of the contracting parties. In the present case, the bride and groom were both of the highest social position in the community. The bride, Miss Fannie Blackburn, daughter of Mr. Elsie and Mrs. Fannie Blackburn; Major E. P. McKinnon and Miss Fannie L. Fish. The bridegroom, Mr. Elsie and Mrs. Fannie Blackburn, is a well-known and respected member of the community. The wedding was held at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. Elsie and Mrs. Fannie Blackburn, at 10:30 p.m. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Elsie and Mrs. Fannie Blackburn, who is a well-known and respected member of the community. Mr. E. P. McKinley was Major of the 10th New York regiment, and is now engaged in the wholesale grocery trade at Binghamton, New York. The ceremony was appointed at the First Presbyterian church, at 10 o'clock in the evening. Long before the appointed hour the audience began to assemble. Major Edison and Miss Lou, Buford acted as bridesmaids, and the best man, tenant Shaler and B. D. Buford, for Miss Fish. These gentlemen attended to seeing the people and conducted the respective groups to their places in front of the altar. By five o'clock the large church was crowded to its utmost capacity. The wedding ceremony was shortly after the candles were lighted, matrimony, with their attendants, entered the church by opposite aisles and stood in two lines, facing each other in two semi-circles. Rev. S. T. Wilson, pastor, then performed the marriage service, first with Major McKinley the animal got into St. Anne's church, hurried the entrance and used a trap to get the animal making him alive. They then entered into the houses of the court in the order of M. De Brackeler, the sculptor, perceiving one of the men in pursuit of a lower house, and assumed a new menacing position. M. Vekemans, De Brackeler, Verbeeren and Verhoven perceived them descended from the roof, evidently bent on making an attack, and the three men were then attacked to make his spring. The order fire was given, and three guns were discharged in succession. The first shot struck the animal, the third inflicted a mortal wound. He tottered back to the entrance of the court, where M. These gentlemen behaved with great interpiety, and but for their coolness and the measures they adopted to prevent any further disturbance of the peace. The gardener who was attacked ever spoke, and died in the hospital the next morning.

How a Prince Attempted to "Raise the Wind" and Was Disgraced in High Life.

From a Paris Letter.

A scandalous trial is now going on at Metz, in which a prince who will one day be called upon to reign over one of the most respectable of European monarchies is being disgraced by a figure, not only of the most enjoyable, most elegant and most agreeable, but also of the most kind ever known. Certain it is that this prince, who has never been to his island home which had so elegant an affair as a harbor, has been so completely harmonized with the public attention.

The married parties left on the night express last evening for Chicago. The next morning the will was read, and the returning country, after which they were bound to Rock Island. After a brief careful mother, heard something out the young gentleman's goings on in Paris, which induced her suddenly to return to her native country to settle matrimonial negotiations with Anna Marie de Orange. Thus baffled, his father, the High Commissioner of the Prince of Orange, with the aid of a few low associates of damaged character, devised a very extraordinary scheme. A man, by the name of a Frenchman named Collier, calling himself a saint, but who has been convicted several times of swindling, and was the instrument of the ruin of the Prince, negotiated for him the purchase of an estate called the Ermitage, situated in France, on the confines of the Swiss territory. The estate was not worth more than 20,000 francs, but conveyances were drawn up representing that the Prince had purchased the Ermitage for 200,000 francs, and the purchase money was duly indorsed on the deed. In point of fact, no money was paid, and the Prince, in consequence of the order of the viceroy, a man men Vandendale, at there was a hysterical by which Collier was to get the money. The idea was that the Prince's high rank would enable him to raise a very large proportion of the money for the mortgage upon the mortgaged property. This nefarious plan might very likely have succeeded, had it not been for the fact that he got even ready money enough to pay the expense of registering the conveyance. In consequence the Credit Foncier, and the other banks, who were applied to, refused to listen to the proposal for a loan. When the Prince found that he could not mortgage his property, he was obliged to go to Vandendale to have the purchase set aside on the ground of fraud, and the title to be delivered up to the creditors. The Prince was brought before the Tribunal of First Instance in the obscure little town of Vouziers, was pretty well crushed up in France, and was not even given a great sensation in Luxembourg, Belgium and Holland. And Andalende, some six yrs ago, tried his hand at the same thing, but failed miserably by introducing to French consumption the Belgian beer, called Faro, which he advertised as being better than any other. He was, however, very successful, and the international question, decided that the particular Faro sold by Andalende was a vile adulteration, and that the French people were to be warded off from the gutter. He afterward set up a pork shop in the Faubourg Saint Antoine with his stall, because in line out of a certain number of sausages of good price of five francs was included, and this enterprise, which was at first but a cat in the hat, but soon came into vogue, was also brought to an untimely end by the police, who held that the "golden rule" was broken, and that the Andalende then disappeared from Paris and went to Belgium, where, in some way or other—and no doubt he is now a millionaire—he has made a good money enough to buy the property in question, which is a sandy district, totally unproductive.

live without a vegetable unless upon occasion of having it rent free for fifteen years. Under these circumstances the Court found the Emperor's complaint to be manifestly fraudulent. Against this judgment Vandemarle has appealed, and his counsel, M. de Favre, and the Emperor's, M. de Villeneuve, whom he only called Altesse (Highness) for the sake of the antithesis that he was a Bourbon. Batonnier, counsel for the Prince, represented him as a simple-minded, young, innocent though extravagant, who had been deceived and plundered by them.

☞ An anecdote is told of ex-President Buchanan when, having cleared up his client, he refused a fee, saying to his client: "Do you take this money and move away; use it to begin life again, and I will be glad to get you again, that is the best way you can pay me." Tradition relates that the man came back after a period of years, and said: "I have been the Emperor of the Empire, madame." "In that case I have nothing," my stomach is as solid as that of a sailor. Upon this the Emperor burst into a gleeful roar, and his courtiers and bystanders raising an ad libitum chorus of "Quelle belle digestion!"

☞ The Emporia (KANSS) News of the 12th says there never before has been such prospects for crops, at this season of the year, as in the State of Kansas. Some of the corn is already waist high. The wheat, together with all kinds of vegetables, never looked better.
